The new 18-inch MacBook Pros coming to the retail market this September will be faster than their predecessor thanks to Intel's Core i7-powered range, but will also have much lower standby power consumption than the previous models. The 13-inch MacBook Pro models will also be available for people that need an entry-level model. However, this time Apple will not introduce the 13-inch base model with an Intel Core i3 processor, but a slower entry-level desktop Mac with an Intel Core i5. This is a move to support the MacBook Air, which is Apple's entry-level laptop and therefore the MacBook Air will take a larger share of the lineup. The MacBook Air will now also come with a faster processor. However, the 10.6-inch MacBook Air will not be replaced with a new model. Apple is working on some new laptops in the form of the 12-inch MacBook and the iMac. Apple is also expected to reveal new iPad models with larger displays and faster processors, such as the A7 chip. But it's unlikely Apple will introduce new AirPods to the market anytime soon. Apple is expected to introduce its new MacBook Air and MacBook Pro models in September during the company's press event, where it is expected to unveil the iPad Air 2. The goals of this project include the identification and characterization of genetic loci associated with susceptibility to common diseases. Chromosome 6p21-p21.3 has been suggested as a common susceptibility locus in many diseases. To search for susceptibility loci in the region, we are characterizing a panel of recombinant inbred (RI) mouse strains between 129/Ola and C57BL/6J. In the first year of this project, the most extensively typed RI strain (N=24-36) has been used to screen for a novel strong modifier locus on Chromosome 6. The use of heterogeneous stocks (N=141) in the identification of QTLs on Chromosomes 9, 10 and 11 as well as a positional mapping experiment in the RI panel indicated that RI typing can be useful for the mapping and identification of disease susceptibility loci. We have now characterized a second locus on Chromosome 11 in an F2 cross between C57BL/6J and 129. This locus, called Ubbt2, is strongly associated with several behavioral phenotypes. f678ea9f9e
